Rally together to solve South Africa's missing middle funding crisis and fund our youth for a sustainable economy

Missing Middle Students come from households with R350 000 to R600 000 income per annum

The Department of Trade and Industry has issued revisions to Code 300 which deals with Skills Development in the B-BBEE Codes of Good Practice.

Code 300 seeks to incentivise employers to contribute towards skills development in the form of bursaries for black students at all higher education institutions.

This regulation will help empower and fund "missing middle" students who want to study towards scarce-skills professions. But to do this requires a positive and proactive response from South Africa's captains of industry.

The Ikusasa Student Financial Aid Programme (ISFAP) is a sustainable proven solution to funding South Africa's "missing middle" students for meaningful participation in the economy.

ISFAP addresses the plight of our country's youth education crises.
